

Rev. Kenneth Ofula

Rev. Kenneth Ofula is a priest in the All Saints Cathedral Diocese of the Anglican Church of Kenya, with a prolific history working with faith-based and non-profit organizations. He is currently a PhD candidate in World Christianity and history of religions at Princeton Theological Seminary. His Christian journey can be summarized as, “baptized in an indigenous church, confirmed Catholic, ordained Anglican, interned Methodist, educated in graduate school by Presbyterians and charismatic in faith.” His dissertation research uses ethnographic study, ritual theory and Ngugi wa Thiong’o’s novel, The River Between to examine the resurgence of indigenous puberty rites in the Anglican congregations in Kenya. His research and teaching interests include indigenous studies, ritual theory and practice, adolescent formation, World Christianity, and organization culture and change in higher educational institutions.
