

Scott L. Thumma is Professor of Sociology of Religion and director of the Hartford Institute for Religion Research (www.hartfordinstitute.org) at Hartford Seminary, Hartford, Connecticut. He has published numerous articles, research reports, and chapters on religious life in addition to co-authoring three books, The Other 80 Percent, Beyond Megachurch Myths, and Gay Religion. He has researched and written on megachurches, evangelicalism, gay religious life, congregational studies, the rise of nondenominational churches, the impact of the Internet technology, and the changing religious landscape.

Scott is the Principal Investigator for 5-year Lilly Endowment grant to study the impact of the pandemic on churches (www.covidreligionresearch.org) and a Thriving in Ministry grant. He co-leads the Faith Communities Today (www.faithcommunitiestoday.org) national research project and has also conducted 7 national studies of megachurches and 3 national studies of nondenominational churches. He is also on the organizing committee for the 2020 US Religion Census effort. Additionally, Scott consults with churches and religious organizations on congregational vitality and member engagement.
